7 Abstract

Nigeria is the only country in the world that is rich in oil and other mineral resources and yet 8 its citizens remain at the very lowest ladder of the poorest people in earth. It is estimated 9 that most Nigerians live on less than a (Us) dollar in a day. This poverty situation has 10 affected the general perception and of doing things among Nigerian so negatively that it has 11 become a problem in Nigeria mostly at the grassroots level. Although poverty is a Universal 12 phenomenon that affect the Socio-economic and political well being of its victims whether in 13 developed or underdeveloped countries however, statistics and data show that poverty in poor 14 countries is absolute and more pronounced in rural areas due to lack of accountability and 15 good governance among council officials. Since our independence the rural folks that 16 constitute significant segment of the Nigerian Society live in abject and hopeless poverty and 17 are neglected in terms of socioeconomic and political wellbeing. There is therefore an urgent 18 need for elected local government officials to be accountable and ethical imperative for good 19 governance at the grassroots levels. This paper has provided an ethical and empirical analysis 20 of the problems, and points out that poverty cannot be totally eradicated but it can be 21 alleviated and that its rest on transparency and good governance at the grassroots in Nigeria. 22

Abstract-Nigeria is the only country in the world that is rich in oil and other mineral resources and yet its 27 citizens remain at the very lowest ladder of the poorest people in earth. It is estimated that most Nigerians live 28 on less than a (Us) dollar in a day. This poverty situation has affected the general perception and of doing things 29 among Nigerian so negatively that it has become a problem in Nigeria mostly at the grassroots level. Although 30 poverty is a Universal phenomenon that affect the Socio-economic and political well being of its victims whether 31 in developed or underdeveloped countries however, statistics and data show that poverty in poor countries is 32 absolute and more pronounced in rural areas due to lack of accountability and good governance among council 33 34 officials. Since our independence the rural folks that constitute significant segment of the Nigerian Society live 35 in abject and hopeless poverty and are neglected in terms of socioeconomic and political wellbeing. There is 36 therefore an urgent need for elected local government officials to be accountable and ethical imperative for good governance at the grassroots levels. This paper has provided an ethical and empirical analysis of the problems, 37 and points out that poverty cannot be totally eradicated but it can be alleviated and that its rest on transparency 38 and good governance at the grassroots in Nigeria. 39 in Nigeria, which constitute about 73-75% of the nation's population will reveal dirt and unmotorable roads, 43 women and children walking barefooted and trekking long distance to get water and firewood, pupil studying 44 under trees, dilapidated and ill-equipped heath centres and scores of poverty driven problems (Aderonmu, 2007). 45 46 The rural dwellers suffer on many fronts and are powerless to improve their situation because of ill health, poor education and lack of access to many opportunities available to them. They are extremely vulnerable to natural 47 disasters and economic upheavals as well as to crime and violence. The rural dwellers are often deprived of basic 48 rights that urban dwellers take for granted. Although successive governments in Nigeria since independence to 49 date have attempted severally to eradicate poverty in the country through various programmes, the assessment 50 of their contributions to poverty reduction is scanty compared to the huge amount of resources committed to 51 the programmes ??Egware, 1999), because local government official are not always accountable and lacks good 52 governance. The situation where local governments merely collect budgetary allocations and taxes and rates 53 without any form of change in the lives of the people and their environments is not good enough, and it is 54 also unethical, undemocratic and anti-governance. The local government must begin to affect the lives of rural 55 communities more positively by reducing poverty than ever before as such; positive changes in the lives of the 56 lives of rural communities will cumulatively result in the growth and development of the national economy. 57

Anybody that has experienced poverty especially in rural Nigeria will agree with me that poverty is a very dangerous human situation that has the capacity to influence and alter the psychic and intellectual Constitution of the person especially where it has become abject as we noticed in most of our local government areas. According to Ahmed, (2007), Poverty in the rural areas has become a common phenomenon

62 2 Introduction

O democracy can become dynamic, acceptable and sustainable if the system of governance at the grassroots level is not people oriented, friendly, participatory and accountable" (Adedeji, 1999). Sachs, (2005) postulated that, "The stability of a fledging government depends to a large extent on the ability of the governing elites to eradicate poverty For government cannot thrive in an impoverished country where people live below $1 per day, and where stresses of diseases, famine and climate shock are pervasive". These quotations capture the central objectives and 69 poverty alleviation.

"N that it is almost becoming an accepted factor of life because the elected officials and rulers lack accountability, vision and mission of governance". The Nigeria poverty situation, be it at the state and local governments however, presents itself as a paradox in the sense that the country is richly endowed in both human and material resources yet its people remain among the poorest people of the earth planet.

Some scholars have posited that, the extreme poverty of rural Nigerians is one of the greatest hindrances in the 74 75 fight against corruption and bad governance in the country. Although the local governments are most endowed in resources with ever expanding budget yearly in Nigeria, yet corrupt elite that remains a stranglehold on political 76 power has reduced its citizens to destitution. Consequently rural Nigerians who ordinarily resent any form of 77 slavery are only too eager now to go into slavery in Western, Asian countries for survival. Poverty is so deeply 78 etched on their faces and in their psychology that it can be truly regarded as the major underlying factor for the 79 moral turpitude that other people so readily point to in Nigerian rural dwellers. In its full manifestations, albeit 80 81 in material, moral, intellectual and psychological spheres, ruralpoverty has created political thugs, professional 82 prostitutes, constant migrations and sycophancy, Boko Haram membership etc, that makes the running of 83 government very difficult in Nigeria. These are some of the missing ingredients in our local government system 84 which this paper is out to address. The paper is divided into eight parts including this introduction, the remaining 85 parts is organized as follows part two dwellers on theoretical and conceptual framework of accountability and good governance which will provide basis for part three which examines the concept of good governance and that 86 of local government which will provide basis for part four which examines rural poverty situation in Nigeria. Part 87 five discusses Accountability and good governance for poverty free rural government in Nigeria. Part Six, Seven 88 and Eight contain challenges of Accountability and good governance at the grassroots level, suggestions for the 89 improvement of accountability and good governance in rural Nigerian then the conclusion. 90

Although accountability is widely believed to be a good thing, the concept is highly abstract and is often used in a very general way. According to Robertson (1993) a typical definition is that "accountability concerns the process by which those who exercise power, whether as government elected representatives or as appointed officials, must be able to show that they have exercised their powers and discharged their duties properly". Such a broad definition is necessary as the detailed nature of accountability varies greatly from one situation to another.

Ohonba (1986) has argued that accountability is not confined to democracy or local governments as some writers appear to assume. He argues that where as it is the case in demonstrably government officials are accountable to the electorates, this is not to say that officials in other economic systems are never accountable to those over who they work with/for even if the form of accountability and degree to which it seems to obtain differs from western type of government and economic ideology. It therefore means that for a specific country, one can identify a set of different relationship procedures that constitutes main element of accountability.

105 Oshisami (1992) posits that generally people tend to quote accountability as given account of one's stewardships of what is entrusted to the leader by the people. The dictionary further defines accountability as responsibility or 106 expected to give an explanation. This he said is not always true. The fact, according to him is that, one can have 107 responsibility for carrying out a number of functions or for a number of things, whereas he may be accountable 108 for only a few of them or for only one of them. Accountability in general is more specific than responsibility. 109 Accountability in government has been observed to be beyond the stewardship function. This is because there 110 is the added dimension of complexity, which is one of the most significant aspects of managing government 111 complexity not irrationality, in assessing whether or not one us or allocation of resources is better or more 112 beneficial than another. Accountability in public places can be nebulous or articulated as possible, depending 113 on circumstances and societal values In other words, there are also many patterns of public accountability 114 (Ademolekun 1986) for instance, identified five patterns of public accountability thus political, legal, financial, 115 social and ethical accountability. 116

The popularity and acceptance of accountability stem from the fact that it is necessary to control and check the 117 work of leaders and managers and their accountability, according to Dariani, (2006) due to the following reasons 118 119 probable mistakes in human being, prevention from probable corruption, prevention from wasting of resources 120 and government facilities, best selection in programming and policies and justification of citizens rights. Our values has always emphasized on accountability in all affairs for proper governance of the society. The modern 121 theorems of accountability also stem from the fact that all persons are exposed to corruption, (Lewis, 2006). The 122 position of this paper is that corruption is evil and must be avoided in all spheres especially at the grass root 123 level to alleviate the type of poverty experienced in Nigeria. 124

Again the basics of accountability as posited by Ademola (2007) include monitoring which is the first and 125 important base and pre-theorem of accountability in a way that without it, there is no meaning for accountability 126 and practicality with lack of monitoring It is impossible to invite people, government and organizations to 127 accountability. The second base of accountability is transparency, because without transparency in all affairs, it 128 is impossible for accountability to be the base of positive effects and results. Thirdly, accountability which may 129 result from an accountable system and guarantees its continuous and correctness is consideration of the claims It 130 is good to prevent any violation and convinced the people that there are real penalties for those who may violate 131 132 the rule (Lewis 2006).

133 5 III.

Governance can be defined as the fundamental process by which the lives and dreams of people are jointly pursued by deliberate and systematic strategies and policies for the attainment of their maximum potential. It is the combination of responsible leadership and enlightened public participation" (Jegede 2001). Governance rather than being perceived in political term as institution is construed as the management of the lives of people in a systematic, organized way for the best possible results, using the consensus of the people's will, vision, wisdom and aspiration, (Jegede, 2001).

Thus if governance embraces all of the methods-good and bad that societies use to distribute power and public resources thus problems of good governance is therefore a subset of governance wherein public resources and problems are managed effectively, efficiently and in response to critical needs of society. Effective democratic forms of governance ideally should rely on public participation, accountability and transparency. This implies a high level of organizational effectiveness in relation to policy formulation and policies actually pursued especially in the conduct of economic policy and its contribution to growth, stability and popular welfare-poverty alleviation. Thus good governance also includes openness and the application of the rule of law.

As a necessary condition for development, a system of good governance in a limited administrative sense, would consist of a set of rules and institutions, (that is, a legal framework for development in this case poverty alleviation at the grass root level) and system of public administration which is open, transparent, efficient and accountable Such a system would provide clarity, stability and predictability for interested investors/developers which would constitute the essential engine of economic development and in turn reduce poverty in the rural areas.

<sup>154</sup> In recent years, people have been much more concerned about good governance than anything else especially <sup>155</sup> as attempt to sustain and consolidate the hard-won democracy continuous to gain ground at the grassroots.

According to a newspaper report (New Nigeria, October 3, 2000), Good governance is the positive action undertaken by a government to promote democracy and achieve social justice".

For governance to be considered good, scholars have come out with the following attributes accountability based on the notion of popular sovereignty are public choice, a legal framework that guarantees the rule of law and due process, popular participation in decision-making process based on political and social pluralism, and on freedom of association and expression and bureaucratic accountability based on impersonality of office, uniform application of rules and rationality of organizational structure.

<sup>165</sup> 8 Concept of Local Government

Local government unit is almost universally found in modern politics and in both developed and developing countries Local government continues to be vital in political and economic issue in Nigeria since the 1976 Reform. It continues to place strains on politics in general and inter-governmental economic relations in particular. But what is local government? Where does local government derive its power? What is involved in referring to local government as "third tier" of government? These are some of the questions that we set out to provide answer.

The conceptualization of the term has been rather problematic Because of this; there has been no universally accepted definition of the term "local governments". A number of authors have pointed out the problematic nature of the term For example, Mackenzie (1994) said that, there is no normative general theory from which we can derive testable hypothesis about what local government is Wickwar (1970) seems to agree with Mackenzie when he stated that no greater authors like Austin, Bentham, Buchama or Mill have thought it fit to determine the principles of local government in general.

177 While it s difficult to fault all the foregoing especially Wickwar's observations, it does not negate the fact that 178 we are struck with reality that there is something like local government, which has to be dealt with. Anyway we Will like to go with scholars who define it as the level of government closest to the people It is vested with 179 some powers to exercise control over the affairs of people in its domain. The United Nations Division of Public 180 Administration defines local government as a political sub-division of a nation (or in a federal system or a state) 181 which is constituted by laws and has substantial control of local affairs including the power to impose taxies 182 or exert labour for prescribed purpose. The government body of such an entity is elected or otherwise locally 183 selected. 184

The 1976 Nigeria Local government Reforms sees local government as "Government at the local level exercised through representative council established by law to exercise specific powers within a defined area".

Arising from the above definitions, we can reasonable be sure of what local government is all about. The characteristics of local government can be deduced from the above definitions are:

-Is a sub-system playing its part within the larger political system (Oladoke 1984). -It is established by law and has certain functions arid responsibilities -It is the lower level of government in a unitary political system and lowest level of government in a federal three-level government -It is a legal entity of its own and can sue and be sued -Its council members could be elected or selected -It is a political unit with defined territory and certain specific population, (150,000-800,000) as prescribed by the 1976 Reforms

<sup>194</sup> 9 VI. Poverty Situation in Rural Nigeria

Just like the concept of "accountability" and "good governance", poverty defies precise definition due to its 195 multidimensional natures ??ike (2003) affirms this when he argued that "poverty has narrow and broad definition 196 partly because it is a physical matter and partly because poverty is relative" He asserted further that it is physical 197 because a poor person in one country may not be perceived as such in another country Nweje and Ojowu (2002) 198 defined three categories of poverty, and subjective poverty. These scholars argued that families or groups are 199 said to absolutely poor when "they have inadequate resources particularly real income to obtain the types of 200 diets needed to enjoy some fixed minimum standard of living determined by a given society, which Schiller (1976) 201 considers as some amount of goods and services essential and that these who are unable to obtain them are said 202 203 to be "absolutely" poor. These essential goods and services include water, food, clothing, housing, health care, sanitation and education. 204

Relative poverty on the other hand implies a situation in which an individual or household has goods and services which are lower than those of other people or households in the society Schiller (371-413)? on the other hand posited that subjective poverty is expressed in a range of non-material and intangible qualities based on a respondents feeling of their standard of living Newje et al. (2002). From Vaidynanthan's (2002), perspective poverty is the feeling of whether one is poor or not depending on the absolute minimum standards of living below which one may be categorized as poor. While Odey (2008) sees poverty as an all inclusive hydra, problematic of unacceptable human deprivation of general welfare, denial of opportunities, choice and expectations.

This paper is more concerned with absolute poverty because this category of poverty is prevalent among rural Nigerians. On this basis, the definitions of poverty as argued by the World Bank the Copenhagen Declaration on poverty 1995; and in the Journal of Poverty would be examined. According to the world Bank, Poverty is a living condition in which an entity is faced with malnutrition, illiteracy, low life expectancy, insecurity, powerlessness and low self esteem It implies economic, social and political, cultural and environmental deprivation" World Bank (2001).

The Copenhagen declaration on poverty in 1995 also argued that poverty has various dimensions and manifestations, including lack of income and productive resources sufficient enough to ensure sustainable livelihood, hunger and malnutrition, ill health, limited or lack of access to education and productive resources sufficient enough to ensure sustainable livelihood, lack of basic services, increased mobility and mortality from illness, homelessness and in adequate housing, unsafe environment, social discrimination and exclusion It is also characterized by lack of participation in decision making and in civil social and cultural life Copenhagen Declaration (2001).

Moreover, the Journal of poverty explained poverty to mean more than less been impoverished and political and 225 social resources". This overall condition of inadequacy extend to the denial of the expression of basic human rights 226 among others, in rural Nigeria At independence, in 1960 through to the era of oil boom in the 1970s the poverty 227 level in the grassroot was not so escalated. However, records have shown that since 1980 and throughout the 1990's 228 to the present1poverty level in the grassroots has been on the increase. For example the Federal Office of Statistics 229 (FOS) (2000), poverty profile of local governments first published in 1999 revealed that the level of poverty rose 230 from 28 1% in 1980 to 46.3, percent in 1985 but dropped slightly to 47.2 percent in 1992 it however, rose sharply 231 to 69.6 percent in 1996 and has ever since been on the increase in an alarming proportion. This increase was/is 232 associated with the prolonged military rule in the county which was characterized with anti-democratic norms. 233 Their anti-democratic posture was seen as capable of causing any local government official unaccountable and of 234 bad governance, hence the prevalence of poverty among the rural Nigerian populace. The military administration 235 in Nigeria thwarted the democratic process and institutionalized anti-rural values in Nigeria it was under the 236 military that such vices like corruption in all its ramification, ethnicity, religious fanaticism and negation of 237 merit amongst others became more pronounced especially at the grassroot level because the military actually 238 entrenched, in local government politics of calumny, sit-tight syndrome, unaccountability, bad governance and 239 240 abuse of scarce resources. All these anti ethical of rural values precipitated abject poverty of the grassroots in 241 Nigeria.

Moreover, despite the 1976 Local government, which was aimed at restructuring the council to meet the 242 aspiration of the people for greater political participation and economic empowerment, empirical evidence has 243 shown that accountability arid good governance is yet to take its rightful place at the grassroots level in Nigeria 244 Because the Constitution establishing them does not allow the rural populace have a control, contributions or 245 checks on the elected officials. They are not accountable to the people they are supposed to serve and this no 246 doubt encouraged bad governance. It is therefore correct according to Victor 2009: 31-34 "to say that most of the 247 crises of corruption which is perpetuating poverty at the grassroots level in Nigeria can be traced to constitutional 248 provisions". 249

For example the Nigerian constitution gave local government a separate status as a third tier of government, but at the same time subordinates local government to the state government. With this, who will the officials be accountable to? This provision is contained in the 1999 constitution as follows:

The system of local government democratically elected is under this guaranteed and accordingly the government of every state, shall be subject to section 8 of this constitution ensures their existence under a law which provide for the establishment, structure, composition, finance and function of such councils.

The implication of this provision is that local government derives its existence from the state. It therefore means that the state government shall make laws to regulate its local government, and of the same time local government is expected to function as a tier of government with some of the residual powers. What a contradiction? This provision greatly affects accountability of the elected officials to the rural populace and good governance at the grassroots level because they merely dance to the tune of those in the capital and are also responsible to then as well Abaje, (2009).

In addition, the listing of all the 774 local government areas in the constitution by ??ecree 15, 1989 and subsequent unification of the structures of administration regardless of the level of socio-economic, educational and political development as well as differences in culture and traditional political system population and financial resources disparity, all cumulatively have serious implications for the accountability and expected good governance at the grassroots level Abaje, (2009).

Besides, there is the question of ethical issues, which are non-statutory because it borders on equity and 268 fairness, morality, normative as well as norms and tradition. Ethical issues are subjective which have different 269 expression from place to place. However, in all human societies, ethical issues in governance seems to have 270 universal expression as the essence of accountability and good governance is to proved for the welfare of the 271 governed. The ethical issues in local governance can be discussed under the two roles of local government in 272 every political system i.e. political and social-economic. Local governments are set up to promote the idea of 273 accountability and good governance while at the same time providing socioeconomic services to alleviate poverty 274 of any form at the grassroots. These roles have some theoretical under pinning. 275

This could have prompted the writings of Mills and his associate who writing as far back as the 16 th century 276 believed that the purpose of local government is essentially to promote democracy at the grassroots level with 277 respect for ethical values and patriotism at heart But some other writers and theorists such as Langrod and 278 Moulin, (1995) argue instead that the aim of establishing local government should be that of service delivery. 279 This has been the argument as to which of those roles is primary and, which is secondary? Irrespective of which 280 line of argument that may receive our sympathy, we may dare say that both roles are complementary and not 281 substitute to each other. The best of each of these two roles must be applied so as to alleviate poverty at the 282 grassroots level in Nigeria. 283

Accountability and Good Governance for Poverty Free Rural Government in Nigeria

The high level of poverty at the grassroots level in Nigeria today is unbelievable more so that: First, Nigeria 286 is well blessed with natural and human resources, and she is under the yoke of a democratic rule. These are 287 potentials for development and reduction of poverty of any type and inequality at the grassroots level Since 288 Nigeria has abundant resources the answer to this could probably be explained in the nature of accountability 289 and good governance. But there are state government manipulations of local government finances and even 290 programmes. This manipulation has so many manifestations. Some of which include the failure of poverty 291 alleviations programmers, failed elections, failed leadership, political and ethnic crises. The poverty Alleviation 292 programme (PAP) for instance gulped 10 billion naira but its impact was not felt at the grassroots. Why? 293 Because it was infested with corruption on the part of the council officials and other officials charged with the 294 implementation of the scheme (News Watch, 2000). The same was said of the National Economic Empowerment 295 and Development Strategy (NEEDS) another government rhetoric concerning poverty alleviation. According to 296 ??enard (2001), "Most of these programmes creates more poverty it is designed to alleviate because after the 297 'launchings, corrupt officials at the three level of government hijack the objectives of the programmes". 298

According to Ademolekun (1993), "Much has been said about the need to develop the grassroots level, but 299 solutions should mainly be aimed at providing good governance and responsible local government official. That 300 he went further by positing that, enhance the development at the grassroots and thus tackle the problem of abject 301 absolute poverty confronting the vast majority of rural people in the midst of plenty" Indeed leadership should be 302 purely based on the principle of accountability and good governance. The constitution of the Federal Republic 303 of Nigeria clearly provides what should be accountability and good governance at any level of government. 304 It provides that Nigeria shall be a state based on the principles of democracy and social justice and that 305 "Sovereignty belongs to the people of Nigeria from whom government through this constitution derives its 306 powers and authority". It further provides that" the security and welfare of the people shall be the primary 307 purpose of government and that "the participation of the people shall be the primary purpose of government" 308 and that "the participation of the people in their government shall be ensured in accordance with the provisions 309 of the constitution" Specifically in section 15 (5), the constitution stipulates that the state shall abolish all 310 corrupt practices and abuse of power". These and other provisions in the constitution aimed at achieving social 311 justice are contained in chapter two of the constitution as fundamental objectives and directive principles of 312 state policy. Again section 13 of the constitution also provides that "It shall be the duty and responsibility 313 of all organs of government, and of all authorities and person, exercising legislative, executive or such powers 314 to conform to observe and apply the provision of this chapter of the Nigeria constitution Therefore the local 315 government leaders/Officials should manage the councils in strict compliance to the rule of law as stipulated by 316 the constitution by been accountable and good governance to the people at the grassroots level Victor (2009). 317

<sup>318</sup> 11 VIII. Challenges of Accountability and Good Governance

It needs be emphasized that the challenges of accountability and good governance has been attributed to popular 319 participation of the rural folks in the day to day running of local government Beyond pervasive culture of poverty 320 that renders our local governments too weak in attaining greater efficiency because of their limited resources. The 321 available scarce resources are far from being judiciously used Agreed that corruption is taking a large chunk of the 322 scarce resources but wastages, duplication of efforts, and palpable inefficiency makes local government to be too 323 alienated from the citizenry In an insightful piece Femi (1989), a political scientist, bemoaned the spate of civil 324 uprising against constituted authorities which raised a fundamental question about the relationship between the 325 local government officials and her Citizenry. The indication is that there is a simmering feeling of exasperation 326 among many which carries with it a readiness to renege on the obligation to obey the law or even take up arms 327 against the council managers From 1989 when this observation was made with respect to the "Criminal" neglect 328 of state functions in terms of provision of social amenities and a decade later, the deplorable living condition 329 of an average Nigerian of all strata of the society was a Childs play when juxtaposed with the present state of 330 poverty, squalor and deprivation at the grassroots level. 331

Compounding the problem of poverty of the citizens at the grassroots level is the civil society in Nigeria, 332 which unlike in other African countries exhibit t clear traits of weakness. The Civil society suffers from some 333 limitation in its capability to serve as vanguard for rural poverty alleviation through accountability and good 334 governance and promotion of popular participation It is beleaguered by an authoritarian state It is one that has 335 to contend with a very strong state either under military autocracy or one party rule. The civil society in its 336 337 form is rather segmentary and non-additive because they contend also with regional and religious factionalism, 338 with membership dominated over others by a particular ethnic group. This segmentation usually undermines 339 national and grassroots alliances around common demands.

Another problem of the Nigerian civil society is that it is non-combative in its struggle for accountability and demand for good governance t the grassroots, whereas accountability and good governance is never handed down arbitrarily on a platter of gold, talk less of its sustenance, it is always fought for. The embarrassing level of illiteracy and general mediocrity limits the mobilization of the civil society in its perennial struggle and consolidation especially on issues of poverty at the grassroots Idenojie (2007).

<sup>346</sup> 13 Suggestions on Improvement of

347 Accountability and Good Governance in Rural Nigeria

In order to achieve accountability and good governance in the alleviation of poverty in the grassroots level, the following strategies are suggested.

? Political Rights should be granted the rural populace to elect the officials whom they prefer the government 350 that will pursue their interest? Committed Government officials that will be accountable and good governance 351 should be sponsored into local government officials? If democracy is understood, there should be no support 352 for any democratic government that abandons, unattended the gross inequality of wealth and continuing 353 impoverished daily living conditions in the rural areas ? Political stability In the extant literature on grassroots 354 development and sustainability generally, there seems to be a kind of consensus that without accountability, 355 probity and transparency in the conduct of the their tier of governance political stability will be a mirage? Weak 356 accountability mechanisms tend to facilitate corruption, prolong poverty and other abuses of office and thereby 357 undermine good governance more generally Therefore for a governance to be considered good, it must be open 358 which suggests that polices are generally subject to prior consultation and deliberations and that there is legally 359 360 enforceable right of public access to local government records and other instruments to check the activities of the 361 officials? An Active Civil Society should be demonstrated at all times Civil Societies, such as non-governmental 362 organizations, -human rights, pro-democracy organizations, the media, Religions assemblages, cooperative unions and professional association as facilitators and defenders of accountable and good government should be widely 363 acknowledge to the extent that they are seen as important instruments that can force the local officials to be 364 transparent and accountable in poverty alleviation programmes? The putative role of the independent media 365 in sustaining political stability, is that of providing the public, space for a wide range of societal opinion to he 366 expressed and supplying the populace which objective is needed help create a feeling of nationhood among the 367 rural people traditionally divided by tribal loyalties to be united to prosecute officials who derail from the dreams 368 and aspirations of the council X. 369

370 14 Conclusion

In a country like Nigeria where more than seventy-five percent of the population lives in rural areas outside the direct influence of either the Federal or state government, it is clear that our promotion of accountability and good governance remains the greatest antidote to the problems of poverty of the grassroots level. And when modern institutions government collapse at other levels, governance is sustained through the traditions at the grassroots No doubt the quest will be an ongoing learning process. There are bound to be several ups and downs along the path, it is important that we alleviate poverty if democracy will be sustained in Nigeria.
